The E-600 is a completely different story. Do you remember the comparison of the Accuphase E-250 and E-260 integrated amplifiers in the last year's February issue of "High Fidelity" (No. 106, February 2013, see HERE)? If the E-550 were the starting point, the E-600 would be one more step further from it than the E-260 was from the E-250.

The E-270 outperforms it in every category from lower noise floor and distortion to more power prior to clipping. The Onkyo of course is a budget product at $300. On not so good news, the Hypex based NC400 amplifier way outshines the Accuphase E-270. It has far less noise, distortion and much more power.

The E-260 is the "entry level" Accuphase integrated. In japan, he's sold for half the price for around 3k $, that makes him a middle class integrated. But it's already a serious opponent for the whole market of integrated amplification. Like all Accuphase, he has a very serious finish and a good overall build quality.
